MARKET EQUILIBRIUM • CHAPTER 4

each price, we get the quantity supplied for the entire market by multiplying the quantity supplied by the typical firm (from the individual supply curve) by 100. At a price of $1, each firm produces 40 units, so the market supply is 4,000 units (see Point A). If the price increases to $2, each firm increases production to 60 units (see Point B), so the market supply is 6,000 units (see Point B).

What happens if there are two identical but larger firms? Different individual supply curves? To compare the market supply in this case, we add the quantities supplied by the hundreds of firms in the market. The assumption that there are identical firms makes it easier to derive the market supply curve from the supply curve of the typical firm, but it does not change the analysis.

Market Equilibrium

In Panel (a), the typical demand curve represents the demand curve for supply curve $Q = 100Q_f$. It shows the price for a market price of $1. The quantity supplied by the typical firm is 40 units, so the market supply is 4,000 units. The $1 price results in a profit for the typical firm, as indicated by the shaded area, and it also results in a profit for the market.

- At the market level, the quantity of the product supplied equals the quantity demanded. The demand curve intersects the demand curve market supply curve at a price of $1 and a quantity of 4,000 units per minute (Point A).
- The typical firm in the market maximizes its profit, given the market price. Given the market price of $1, each of the 100 firms maximizes profit by producing 40 units per minute (Point B).
