

Research Terminology

1. Hypothesis

A hypothesis is a specific, testable prediction made about the relationship between variables. It is a statement that can be proven or disproven through research.

2. Variables

Variables are characteristics or attributes that can be measured or observed in a study. There are different types of variables, including:

- Independent variable: The variable that is manipulated or changed by the researcher.
- Dependent variable: The variable that is being measured or observed in response to the independent variable.
- Control variable: A variable that is held constant to prevent it from affecting the results.

3. Population

The population refers to the entire group of individuals that the researcher is interested in understanding or describing. It is the broader group from which the sample is drawn.

4. Study Population

The study population is the specific group of individuals that the researcher has access to and can study. It may not be the entire population, but rather a subset of it.

5. Study Participants

Study participants are the individuals who take part in the research study. They may be selected from the study population through sampling.

6. Sampling

Sampling is the process of selecting a subset of individuals from the study population to participate in the research study. The goal of sampling is to obtain a representative sample that reflects the characteristics of the larger population.

7. Sampling Frame

The sampling frame is the list or database from which the sample is drawn. It should be representative of the study population and include all the individuals that the researcher wants to study.
