Bridging Diversity Lawrence F. Salmen,Eileen Kane,World Bank,2006 Today one of the central tenets of development is the necessity for learning about and building upon stakeholders and beneficiaries insights needs culture social organization resources and active participation This publication clarifies the myriad approaches to social research being used in the World Bank today The focus is on participatory research as presently practiced and as a potential for forms of research which are not now particularly participatory It makes a number of recommendations to enhance the utility of social research in and outside of the Bank

Participatory Learning Ronald R. Yager,2010 We discuss the participatory learning paradigm and emphasize the all inclusive role that what is already believed plays in every aspect of the learning process One manifestation of this is the appearance of an acceptance mechanism This mechanism determines which data experiences will be used for learning based on its compatibility with what we already believe A prototypical example of a participatory learning system is introduced Methods for formulating the required compatibility function are discussed We introduce the concept of a critic that monitors the performance of the system and gives us some independence from our current beliefs Finally we consider a participatory learning system which does not require that the attribute being learned take numeric values We emphasize that understanding this paradigm can be useful both to help build a digital learning algorithm as well as to provide an instrument for enhanced interaction with others
