Pre-Press and Service Bureau Considerations with Scribus PDF

For service bureaus, printers, magazine publishers and other pre-press providers who are unfamiliar with Scribus, the following notes are meant to anticipate your questions.

Right away, the developers of Scribus, have from day one, made every effort to strictly adhere to the published reference standards in PDF 1.3 and PDF 1.4. Scribus depends on Ghostscript, a third party PS interpreter for EPS importing and partially for PDF importation support. The most recent versions have received considerable attention to assure high quality postscript and EPS generation for print production, including support for overprint and up to 8 spot colors. For those unfamiliar, you can consult <http://www.artiles.com> and www.ghostscript.com for detailed specifications and capabilities.

If you are capable of handling PDF/1.3, this is probably the most reliable way of receiving PDF files from Scribus. See the notes below. Given the increasing sophistication and ease of using PDF both for final output and for placement within other print production applications, I have put together specific application notes based on my own testing, as well as discussions with pre-press technicians from leading commercial printers in North America.

We recommend to end users to install the latest GNU Ghostscript 7.07+ or AFPL Ghostscript 8.14. The developer and I found challenges with earlier versions, which necessitated workarounds and limits to the use of PS operators. The latest versions have resolved a great many of the previous issues. The Ghostscript PS interpreter is used in more than 50 commercial OEM printing and graphic applications.

The default settings for PDF export within Scribus are 1.3, without color management and a user simply needs to select Color > Printer in the PDF Export panel, as well as embed fonts and most settings will be optimized for pre-press.
