Movement Skills Assessment Tool John Jimenez Garcia, 2020 Physical activity is integrated in preventive health programs due to its health related benefits Increasing physical activity levels in children and adolescents is a global objective that focuses in cognitive affective and behavioral factors Physical literacy and models of motor development suggest a positive association between movement competence and physical activity Poor movement competence is associated with a sedentary lifestyle and is a risk factor for musculoskeletal injury Promoting physical activity and sports participation is crucial however participating in physical activity and sports has been related to increased risk of musculoskeletal injury Assessments of physical literacy and movement competence are mainly focused on motor development factors but injury prevention techniques are not considered in these assessments Our objective was to establish the face and content validity of four movement skills each with four evaluation criteria to create a movement skills assessment tool for 8 12 year old children to fill the gap between movement competence and injury prevention assessments We used a modified Delphi method to survey an international expert panel of clinicians researchers and practitioners n 22 Three rounds of surveys were used to achieve consensus on the validity of four movement skills and evaluation criteria Consensus was achieved when 75% or more of the experts scored Agree or Strongly Agree using a 5 point Likert scale In the first and second Delphi rounds the expert panel achieved consensus on the validity of eight movement skills and 53 evaluation criteria In the third round the experts ranked the movement skills and evaluation criteria to identify the top four movement skills and top four evaluation criteria per movement skill to create the movement skills assessment tool This study provided preliminary validity evidence for the movement skills assessment tool Future research should evaluate other psychometric properties and assess injury outcomes of a movement oriented intervention The movement skills assessment tool will be used to screen movement competence and identify movement patterns that present risk factors for musculoskeletal injury in different settings with minimal equipment

Fundamental Movement Skills Assessment Tool ChangKi Hong, 2020 Abstract Fundamental Movement Skills Assessment Tool A Validation Study of Balance Skills Using the Modified Delphi Method ChangKi Hong Background Physical activity PA has a number of health benefits such as weight control and prevention of lifestyle diseases Fundamental Movement Skills FMS are important since they provide a base for PA participation Injury prevention should be considered

within a movement assessment because injuries are inevitable consequences of PA participation. However, current movement assessment tools do not account for injury prevention aspects. Practitioners often have a limited evaluation of movement patterns that is related to musculoskeletal injuries. There is a need for a more robust movement assessment tool that includes an injury prevention component. Balance should be incorporated into the assessment tool since it has been found to support the development of movement competence and has been linked to musculoskeletal injury prevention. Objective: To establish face and content validity of balance skills (BSs) and the associated evaluation criteria to create a FMS assessment tool to identify movement deficits while considering modifiable musculoskeletal injury risk factors. Method: Using the modified Delphi method, a panel of experts completed three rounds of surveys to evaluate the suitability of the item using a 5-point Likert scale. Consensus on the acceptance of an item required 75% in agreement among the panel members. Descriptive statistics were used to analyze the data. Results: Twenty-two of seventy invited experts (31.4%) participated. Twelve skills were initially proposed, and the expert panel reached consensus on including three BSs: Single leg side hop and hold, Two to one foot and hold, and 90-degree jump and hold, and twelve associated criteria. Conclusion: This study provided face and content validity evidence for a FMS assessment tool for children 8-12 years of age. The modified Delphi process resulted in the final list of selected BSs which can be used for further research to evaluate the feasibility and reliability of the tool in various settings. Problems in Movement Skill Development David A. Sugden, Jack Keogh, 1990. Selected problems in movement skill development are highlighted in this book. Some of the topics discussed are cerebral palsy, blindness, mental retardation, apraxia, and general movement skill problems. Each review of a topic is divided roughly into a description of the nature of the problem and an analysis of suggested determinants and influences. The Assessment of Fundamental Movement Skill

Motor Skills Assessment Test (AMSAT) is a norm-referenced and criterion-referenced test to evaluate students ages 10 to 14 years in advanced motor skill performance. The skills include grapevine, running, standing long jump, throwing, catching, kicking, stationary dribble, and dynamic dribbling. The AMSAT is a great tool to use as an educational supplement for physical education, physical therapy, and occupational therapy. The corresponding curriculum will aid in taking the test results to immediate implementation of instructional intervention. This test is easy to administer and provides teachers with a true measure of a student's present level of competence in advanced motor skills. An electronic fill-in form is provided for ease of computations and printing of the reports. Now physical education and adapted physical education teachers can track student progress beyond 10 years of age The AMSAT is the only assessment tool available that measures student performance in this area Adapted Physical Activity Quarterly, 2008 Assessment of Swimming in Physical Education Susan J.
